Clinical practice guidelines are providing guidance for evidence-based musculoskeletal care, and their implementation is known to have significant benefits. This article describes the opportunity to integrate evidence-based care by encouraging and enabling musculoskeletal physicians to develop their own evidence-based core competency areas in key domains of practice. Key competencies identified by the primary investigator in the International Osteoporosis Foundation's (IOF) global competency framework and an osteoporosis-specific model were used to guide discussion at the first IOF global osteoporosis competency workshop. Thirty-four global experts from 19 countries agreed that the key competency areas of practice (diagnosis and assessment, pharmacological management, lifestyle, fracture prevention, and acute fracture management and treatment) are as important for musculoskeletal practice as for other specialties, and that physicians should have the opportunity and the tools to develop the skills to integrate evidence-based practice in these key competency areas.Q: Count total of non-numeric characters from a string and filter if it doesn't fit into an INT I need a very
