For example, you can set mouse buttons to scroll left/right to jump to the next/previous, or two up/down to go to the previously visited position, or enter/exit from full screen mode. Another example is to set Windows virtual/physical mouse buttons to scroll up/down to roll the window up/down, or set whatever button to whatever you want, in which case you'll be able to use any button to scroll. All of this is based on the orientation and the size of your mouse. You can also add a hotkey to each navigation feature, so you can easily turn the mouse into a pointing device. Also, you can define custom profiles, so you can choose exactly how you want your mouse to work, where and how to scroll, and even hide it from your screen.
