There's no need for a manual search, and no need to click between results, because everything happens automatically. What's cool about SearchWiki is that you have the possibility to use different search engines. Other than the default Bing, you're free to use Google, Amazon, or even Wikipedia. You can use it to switch between results, or open an URL for the selected result. When you've done, just click anywhere in the dark blue rectangle to close the menu. Overall, this is a very easy way to search, no matter how specific you are. You get all the detail available with the power to search any website and from any engine.
