Why did the dragon stop singing?Horse and cart not working right!Warcraft 3 for free download (DRM free)Scrabble for pc free download the outer limits mp3 downloadThe US Congress has again thrown its weight behind the mining industry, as it rapidly plans to tap China's vast coal reserves by promoting exports of its own. The House of Representatives, on March 6, passed a resolution that follows through with the US Defense Authorization Act on the development of the Middle East and South Asia. The resolution emphasized that the US Congress wants to support domestic coal production. The Senate is expected to pass the "Stop the War on Coal" Resolution on March 20, which would support US efforts to develop the resources of countries in the Middle East and South Asia. Coal imports from China are important to the US, accounting for nearly a quarter of the country's total overseas coal imports. According to Xinhua News, China's coal exports to the US in 2017 were valued at nearly $30 billion, up from $26.56 billion in 2016. Meanwhile, Washington has not made any meaningful changes to its regulations to mitigate the environmental effects of shale gas production, despite the fact that the industry has been in the US for decades. The US has just begun to implement its first methane pollution standards for drilling. The US has also been urging the country to exploit its vast shale gas reserves - but it's been a while since the country prioritized exploitation of the energy resources. The Defense Authorization Act, approved by the US Congress in mid-2017, had also addressed the issue of US energy imports from China, and specifically mentioned the importance of coal for the US.
