U.S. Army releases initial service member list for Afghan surge AFP, KABUL Thu, Mar 01, 2013 - Page 7 The US military has released the first list of about 8,000 potential troops to support an expanded US military presence in Afghanistan, even as President Obama said he was not “set on a timeline” for a US troop pullout from the country. The initial list reflects a planned surge of forces and the growing number of troops on deployment, ranging from 300 to over 1,000, in the Afghan province of Helmand, including advisers to the local Afghan police, and would be a small number of soldiers, not a "Green Zone" contingent, military officials said. It covers a basic range of capabilities, including support troops for command and control, logistics, maintenance, intelligence and communications,

Afghan National Security Forces (ANSF) and medical personnel, US officials said. The decision by President Barack Obama to surge forces in Afghanistan was announced last week amid mounting concern about the toll on American soldiers of a fierce Taliban insurgency. The new effort will expand the existing troop presence in the country to about 32,000 from about 33,000. But White House spokesman Jay Carney emphasized that that was not a “Green Zone” contingent, like the one that is stationed in Baghdad, unlike the one in Kabul. “We are not looking at this from a Green Zone type of framework,” Carney said. The president’s initial plan to send 4,000 more US soldiers by next spring had been criticized by some as too small, but the plan was revised on Feb. 28 after it was clear that adding about 12,000 soldiers would be needed. On Tuesday Obama called a news conference to explain the decision, which is to take effect on May 10. “The goal is not a timeline,” he said. The decision was announced at the end of a year-long review of Afghanistan, during which US officials have acknowledged that the Taliban now control more than 60 percent of Afghanistan and top Taliban figures say they are closer to victory than before. “We are now weighing our force options, the weight being the impacts of bringing those forces in from other missions,” said Army General John Allen, 0cc13bf012

In the present study, we evaluated the long-term follow-up of 26 patients with dysplastic Barrett's esophagus and endoscopic laser treatment for dysplasia. We report that an excellent control of all neoplastic lesions was obtained in all cases. Twenty patients have been followed up at a mean time of 32.2 months. Two patients (10%) developed recurrent Barrett's adenocarcinoma after endoscopic laser treatment; the patients with synchronous adenocarcinoma died of metachronous carcinoma (6.25%), whereas the patient without synchronous tumor is still alive at 50 months. No gastrointestinal or cutaneous other cancers have been observed during the follow-up. Dysplasia recurrence has been observed in 60% of the cases; among them, five patients presented also synchronous adenocarcinoma. The development of Barrett's adenocarcinoma was observed in 62.5% of the cases with only one lesion. In conclusion, we think that endoscopic laser resection for dysplasia is safe, effective, and a good therapeutic option for the control of dysplasia with reasonable results. It does not entail an excessive incidence of neoplastic progression or of second tumors. However, since a small but relevant risk of developing future carcinoma exists, further studies are required to evaluate the risk factors that may induce the development of carcinoma.
