I have spent a day reading documentation and the Bootstrap website, and I still don't have a clue as to how to apply the "Hello World" method for a button. Here are the steps I have followed: I have downloaded the Bootstrap code from the website. I have added the link to my index.html file I then copied the HTML code for the button from the official website (Hello World for Bootstrap) I tried to add it to my index.

Lithium ion batteries are one of the most efficient batteries available, as well as being lightweight, small and easily portable and rechargeable. They are environmentally friendly and therefore a suitable power source for use in electrical vehicles and unmanned robots. However, there are limitations to the number of recharging cycles which the battery can sustain, thus rendering such batteries unsuitable for use in applications requiring considerable recharging cycles such as in electric vehicles. Thus it is an object of the present invention to provide an improved battery. In U.S. Pat. No. 5,689,168, P. R. Peracchio (see particularly col. 2, lines 12 to 15 and col. 3, lines 44 to 47) suggests that a loss of capacity in rechargeable secondary batteries occurs in part because, as the battery is recharged, water is electrolytically liberated and becomes trapped in the pores of the porous anode material. This is true, however, only to the first few cycles. Moreover, the process has been found to be reversible, so that after the last few cycles, the battery is recharged and discharged indefinitely. This occurs for a number of reasons, most notably as follows: 1. As water is introduced into the porous anode material during charging, when the anode material contacts the electrolyte, more water is electrolytically liberated. This water is then present in the pores of the anode material. PA1 2. As the anode material is discharged, the anode material swells and forces the water out of the pores, thereby facilitating discharge of the electrolyte. PA1 3. The water electrolytically liberated during charging can initiate and accelerate the first chemical reaction of oxidation of the anode material. PA1 1. the electrolytic liberation of water in the anode material during charging has been found to be reversible, i.e., the water in the anode material can be re-induced back into the anode material e79caf774b

I know that C has a function called putc(c) but since I got a Unicode string

from the network, I don't know how to convert it to ASCII in C. I know that UTF-8 is a standard encoding for Unicode, but I couldn't find a way to convert Unicode to UTF-8. A: You can't. Unicode is fundamentally not the same as ASCII. A string containing characters outside of the Basic Multilingual Plane (that is, characters with ordinal value  $> 127$ ) is not representable in ASCII; all the characters in a string have to be within the Basic Multilingual Plane. That being said, if you know the maximum values a string will use, you can compute the number of bytes required to store the string and then write that many bytes into an ASCII-compatible string. Example: `char string_[] = "Hello, World!";` // first find out the number of bytes required for the string in UTF-8: `unsigned int utf8_`
