Q: Can I get web.xml equivalent of spring context mapping xml? Just as the title said, Is there a way in spring to use xml to do something like this: @Endpoint public class SpringBeanMapping{ public SpringBeanMapping(){ } public SpringBeanMapping(Service service, String url){ this.service= service; this.url = url; } If it is not possible, what is the alternative? MyService service = web.getServletContext().getBean(name); The reason why I want to do it is because I don't want to expose my service to the web. Thanks A: I don't want to expose my service to the web. I do understand your concern, but if you are going to use Spring to wire this anyway, then why not just create a Spring bean and then inject it into your application via the @Inject annotation? public class MyClass { @Autowired private Service service; @Inject private SpringBeanMapping beanMapping; public doSomething() { String url = beanMapping.getUrl(); String property = beanMapping.get

FUS Fused in sarcoma (FUS) is a protein that in humans is encoded by the FUS gene. The protein is localized in the nucleus, and the FUS gene is an example of a tumor suppressor gene. Structure Fused in sarcoma is a 191 kDa protein composed of four domains: an N-terminal domain rich in glutamines, glycines, and serines, two proline-rich regions, and a C-terminal domain of unknown function. Function The function of fused in sarcoma has yet to be determined. However, Fused in sarcoma is localized in the nucleus, and is expressed in all but fetal brain tissue. The gene is located on chromosome 16p11.2 and lies in the first intron of U2 small nuclear RNA-associated 3 of chromosome 1 (USNA3). In addition, FUS expression inversely correlates with cell proliferation and growth, suggesting that FUS has a tumor suppressor function. Fused in sarcoma may function to destabilize heterochromatin, preventing the suppression of genes needed for cell growth and division, and/or to promote RNA splicing. Fused in sarcoma has a similar fold to the Split ends protein and is ubiquitously expressed in the human and mouse. Although the identity of fused in sarcoma

Laboratory Training for Radiology: Early Access to a Facility Without a Radiology Residency. In 2016, residents at The Children's Hospital of Philadelphia (CHOP) began to relocate to the University of Pennsylvania (Penn) Health System. In 2017, we began a pilot project to provide co-relocated clinical fellows an "early access" to radiology training. The pediatric training program at CHOP consists of five years of fellowship. Upon completion of fellowship training, the fellows go through a two-month radiology training rotations during which they perform radiology examinations on patients. We have developed an "early access" to the radiology services at Penn of three fellows working on a trainee contract at CHOP. This pilot program is being reported here. All seven pediatric radiology fellows at CHOP have participated in the early access program. Two fellows have completed the residency and fellowships and have moved to Penn. The remaining five fellows have completed their residency and fellowships and are currently at CHOP. Of the seven fellows, five have performed at least 250 radiology examinations on patients and have applied for residency. One fellow has performed more than 1,000 examinations but is not currently applying for residency. During the pilot project, the fellows have performed primarily musculoskeletal examinations, with a small number of other examinations including brain and abdominal. The fellows reported a willingness to accept increased responsibility and to continue training. There has been an increase in the number of pediatric trainees interested in pediatric radiology and increased knowledge of radiology by the fellows. The early access program has provided an opportunity for interested trainees to begin their pediatric radiology training and become familiar with the personnel and processes before completing a three-year radiology residency. The latest in our series of Product of the Year awards A new analytical technique which can screen people for diabetes risk has been named the '
