The Witcher: Enhanced Edition.NRF2 signaling through mitochondrial electron transport chain complexes I-III restores tryptophan recycling in kynurenine pathway as a potential protective mechanism in LPS induced endotoxemia. Endotoxin, LPS causes inflammation in host, which results in neurodegenerative diseases. Development of neurodegenerative diseases including Alzheimer's disease is attributed to breakdown of tryptophan metabolism into neurotoxic products. Phytochemical constituents of natural products are capable to exert neuroprotective effects against LPS mediated inflammation and other oxidative stress mediated disease. Recent studies demonstrated kynurenine pathway is involved in inflammation and neurodegenerative diseases. In this study, we are reporting the effect of tinospora cordifolia (TC) extract against LPS induced endotoxemia and its possible mechanism related to kynurenine pathway. TC extract (200 mg/kg, b.wt. orally) and LPS (20 mg/kg, i.p.) treatment, significantly reduced elevated levels of plasma proinflammatory cytokines like tumor necrosis factor (TNF)- α and interleukin (IL)-1 β and oxidative stress markers like nitric oxide (NO) and malondialdehyde (MDA) as well as kynurenine levels and significant increase in tryptophan level and nuclear factor erythroid 2-related factor 2 (Nrf2) protein expression. The study results imply that TC extract is a potent modulator of LPS induced endotoxemia, which is a part of the novel protective mechanism by which it helps in attenuation of kynurenine pathway and ameliorates endotoxemia. The present invention relates to a liquid crystal display, and more particularly,
