"It's not just a question of the rhetoric, but a question of the effect it's having on our communities, and that is something that I do take quite personally." "For some time, I've been working with rank-and-file members on a platform and a process where we can have a platform that actually reflects the values and beliefs of the Republican Party," she added. She said that when they meet next week to discuss platform plans, "we'll take that platform and make sure it reflects the Republican Party's values, and that means we have to address the immigration issue." She also defended Trump's radical call to close the borders to Muslims. Trump first proposed that idea in December 2015, after a lone extremist used a truck to mow down Christmas shoppers and then stabbed a police officer. I never denied it, and said it publicly
