A: It is better that you have a separate model. At first, you need to make an object which is the body of your character. Then, you have to make another one for the head of your character. Then, you have to start teaching yourself how to make the facial expressions of your character. How do you do this? When you are watching a movie, you have to close your eyes and try to make the facial expression just like the character in the movie. Then, when you are making an animation, you have to make the face of your character move, just like the characters in the movies. I hope that you can start from here. "You are using the full version of Visual Studio to create an animation. Then, you have to use the Compiler Directus application to publish your animation. You can easily find this application in Visual Studio. I hope that this will be useful to you." Q: how can I use the compareTo for a string object in a string array? I have a array of type String, I want to use a compareTo function to find how close the value of the string in the array is to a certain key. I tried to use Arrays.binarySearch(c1, 1);, but it doesn't work. Any idea? Thanks A: binarySearch only makes sense for sorted arrays of data, and the Strings in your array aren't sorted. What you need is a List or something similar which is sorted. There are lots of libraries out there which implement such collections, and I recommend using one of those. If you have control of your collection, you could subclass List and override the compare(Object, Object) method, but that's a bit clumsy. Atypical measles Atypical measles, also known as atypical end of the spectrum measles or atypical measles-like illness, is a form of measles where the severity of the symptoms varies between individuals. Its symptoms include high fever, no other symptoms and a milder disease, as opposed to more typical measles where high fever, rash and respiratory symptoms are typical. The atypical form of the disease can be distinguished by the presence of a large number of cells in an in
