Adobe also offers a collection of tutorial videos on YouTube that teach you how to use Photoshop's various tools. Most of the software comes with a variety of default settings, which are usually optimized for web use, but it's easy to customize your graphics. You can save presets and use the tools in different ways and edit images individually or in groups. For example, you can select an image, choose the appropriate tool, adjust the settings on that tool, and when you're done you can save the settings to create different versions of the image. In addition to that, you can easily import your work into other Adobe programs such as Illustrator, Flash, Dreamweaver, and InDesign. Edit images in the Browser There are plugins that you can install in your browser to allow you to edit and manipulate web pages and videos. This is a handy feature to have if you're a Web designer or an online advertiser, for example, because you can access your desktop editing software from your browser. In addition to that, the variety of software choices and options is much larger than what's available in the browser. Adobe Photoshop CS6 Photoshop CS6 is the first version of Photoshop since Photoshop CS5, and it features a new file system, a timeline, and a complex tool set. It also comes with a few new choices for resizing. You can resize images with the Canvas Size and Warp tools. In addition to that, you can also select presets for different sizes and even crop images with that option. You can also export images to diverse file formats such as TIFF, PNG, JPEG, and GIF. Q: Was the attention of the community taken away by the new Arqade? This question got close (well, I think it did as I didn't vote to reopen). It was asked on Dec 16 but it has low view count (though it has 0 downvotes) and many of the the answers are from high rep users. Now, was the attention of the community taken away by the new Arqade? A: Without getting into a huge debate about the value of the new Arqade site, I'll just say that the site is still very young, so the attention of the community is likely to be much more divided at the moment. The new site is in a time when we also need to try to readjust to some new changes, such as: the new site has an official site for business questions, meaning that there is a much bigger chance of getting questions from site users who might want to post on other SE sites; the new site also has an official community moderation team, with tools and responsibilities that mean the community can also engage in discussions, help the new mods to develop their tools, and interact with the community to get more feedback about the site. These are just some of the things that come with the new site, and it's possible that these new features will not be immediately apparent to the newcomers, nor to the regular users. Overall, I believe that the new site is a great thing for us - we can all learn a lot from the experience here, and it's great for people who want to start a career in moderation.
