For example, I create a MSDeploy file that contains "D:\bin\Debug\Custom.dll", which is then deployed to a target environment. I then add a setting to the target environment to tell it where this assembly is located. If I then undeploy, install, and deploy from a new workspace, I get an error which says that the referenced assembly "Custom.dll" can not be found. Are there any options I can set in the MSDeploy file so that I can tell it where to look for assemblies? A: This can be resolved by selecting each of the dependent assemblies and checking their "Include assembly in the deployment package" options. When you select the option which is unchecked by default and select a dependent assembly, you will get an error saying "Could not resolve the identity of the assembly for the referenced component" if that assembly couldn't be found in the target environment. Here is a sample MSDeploy project configuration to illustrate this: 6d1f23a050
