significance of atrial natriuretic peptide and urine albumin/creatinine ratio.
Study of 2 groups of outpatients with hypertensive disease].
Previous studies have shown that atrial natriuretic peptide (ANP) is a useful marker for assessing cardiac remodelling (CR),

proteinuria and left ventricular function in patients with essential hypertension (EH). We therefore decided to evaluate simultaneously the values of ANP and urine albumin/creatinine ratio (UAC) as a useful noninvasive diagnostic method for detecting CR and proteinuria in EH patients with and without nephropathy. The study included 62 patients with EH divided into two groups: group 1, 33 patients without nephropathy and group 2, 29 patients with overt nephropathy. There was no difference in mean arterial pressure between both groups. CR was assessed on the basis of sonographic measurement of left atrium diameter. In group 2, 24-hour urine was collected for quantitative analysis of UAC. After obtaining baseline measurements

(supine position, sitting position and standing position), patients were submitted to a standing test. The results showed a significant difference between groups 1 and 2 in parameters indicative of CR (left atrium diameter, left ventricular mass and fluid intake). We did not observe any differences in basal ANP plasma levels between both groups. In EH patients with overt nephropathy, plasma levels of ANP showed a linear positive correlation with UAC and a significant positive correlation with
