Riga Bank in the following two months, with the where ables. The free Weimar republic sponsored a series of conferences in Germany, Belgium and Poland. The conferences were resolved to the right of the Weimar republic to revoke acceptance of the Balfour declaration of 1917. The Council of the League of Nations in 1920 considered the question of self-determination and created the concept of self-determination, which stated that the right to vote be the people alone. The conception of international law was in this period based on Roman law. However, there was extensive debate on the position of the individual state within the state, as well as concern with the meaning of international law. A few states had also attempted to redefine national borders on ethnic grounds. The League of Nations did not authorize the acquisition of additional territory by force, and insisted that all acquisitions be made by negotiation, but the belief that the national boundaries of the former Russian empire should be radically altered had become widespread. The Versailles peace conference in 1919 and 1920 determined the boundaries of the former Austro-Hungarian empire. The Permanent Court of International Justice was established by the League of Nations in 1923, to hear legal disputes between states. In 1923, the Congress of San Marino changed its name to the State Party to the Covenant of the League of Nations. The Soviet Union, Britain and France soon signed the pact, with the Soviet Union the only signatory in 1929. In 1920, a United Nations Trusteeship Council was established by the Council of the League of Nations. The original trustees included the United States and European powers, with two African countries, Iran and Egypt, and India, Brazil and China to join later. The Trusteeship Council gradually came to operate as the UN's main administrative structure. In addition, a set of Rules of the United Nations (RUN) was established by the UN General Assembly in 1947, to help implement the UN Charter, and maintain a set of standards for the organization. States which have ratified the Charter are required to comply with the precepts. Although generally most states comply with the provisions, non-signatories...
