typical brute force attack, where the passwords are tried in order, could take on the order of 2,400 hours, or two and a half years. but the hacker could make the attack go even faster by skipping many passwords and instead focusing on those passwords which were most likely to crack. the hacker also determined that the average cracking time was less than a minute. that means that if he started the attack on the first available password, the attacker would be likely to be able to crack it in just 30 seconds or less. that would be enough time to crack the password and then move on to the next password. 5ec8ef588b
