Jobs Report: "Jobless Claims increased 25,000 to 351,000 in the week ending November 2. The four-week average was 353,750. Continuing claims unexpectedly increased 4,000 to 2.49 million. The four-week average, which smooths out weekly volatility, was 2.48 million. Continuing claims are a proxy for layoffs. The four-week average is seen as a better gauge of layoffs. Both figures were slightly worse than expected." A decade ago the initial manufacturing payroll workforce was 62.1 million strong. Today, it is 67 million and about 50 million are on temporary or contract jobs. The combined number of manufacturing and service sector employees, currently around 71.5 million, is projected to fall to 64.4 million by 2020. When the US hit 12 million new jobs last year the payroll/jobs growth rate hit 9.4 percent. Now with 13.1 million jobs created in the past two months, the growth rate is 5.5 percent. From The Crisis To The Recovery, What Is The Real Unemployment Rate? - RealTime Economics: "As recently as September 2008, the U.S. jobless rate was 5.6 percent. Now it is 9.6 percent, nearly a full percentage point higher. And that is not just a statistical trick of the calendar. It reflects a significant shift in the composition of the labor force since September. A record-high 22.5 million people were working in September. In October, that fell by 589,000, the biggest drop in almost 50 years. As a result, the labor force participation rate, which measures the share of adults who are employed or looking for a job, dropped by nearly half a percentage
