I have a project where a pickle file is used as a data source for reading a dictionary containing different types of data. I have managed to load the pickle with Python 2.7 using the following code: with open('bla.pickle','rb') as f: data = pickle.load(f) I know that with the function getattr I can get any attribute I want but is there any way to access the type of each object? A: from collections import namedtuple import pickle census = namedtuple('census', 'name date population') with open('bla.pickle','rb') as f: data = pickle.load(f) new census = namedtuple('census', 'name date population') for x in data.items(): new census = census(*x) This will save the pickle file as census.pickle It is important that you or your doctor knows your family history of asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). In some cases the close relatives (parent, sibling, child) can experience similar symptoms but are not being treated for COPD or asthma. Some family members who experience similar symptoms will likely develop COPD. Smoking history is very important. If your relative has a history of smoking, ask your doctor whether they can prescribe an inhal
